ADVANCING
Quality of Life
FOR ALL

Kelly O'Brien

Lorraine Koury

In 2024, the Commission for Women selected two dynamic city residents as Women of Influence: Kelly O'Brien and Lorraine Koury.

You've seen Kelly O'Brien around the city for the past 13 years, perhaps as a member of the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board or the Old Town Fairfax Business Association board of directors. Or maybe with the Asian Festival on Main leadership team, as a mentor at Daniels Run Elementary, or as a class parent and school supplies coordinator at Mosaic Elementary. Her passion is volunteering — or, as she says, "putting into the world what you want to see — it could be a lot or it could be a little, but it's something."

Volunteering gives her a way to gather knowledge and meet new people. "You come together with people who are like-minded, and you do something to better the world in general," she said. "It's another avenue of connection, and you're meeting people you wouldn't have met otherwise."

Celebrate the City's Public Works Professionals

National Public Works Week is May 19-25 — but every day is Public Works Day in Fairfax City. The department's wide scope of responsibility means their functions affect every other municipal department.

Public Works professionals provide a wide array of services: manage and maintain city structures, infrastructure, and facilities including roads, sidewalks, storm-water facilities, wastewater facilities, signage, signals, government buildings, right-of-way, public grounds, wastewater facilities, fleet and equipment management, removal of snow and ice, refuse and recycling, leaf collection, CUE Bus service, and many streetlights.

One division affects all city functions: the storm drainage division that oversees the city's stormwater management system. The city's 10-member storm drainage division keeps the stormwater system functioning properly to help prevent flooding, keeps our streets and neighborhoods clear of debris, and keeps our local streams and the Chesapeake Bay healthy.

Stormwater is water from rain or other precipitation that doesn't soak into the ground. It flows off streets, parking lots, construction sites, and neighborhoods — and is channeled into the city's system of pipes, ditches, and other flood control facilities and waterways. As stormwater flows over paved and hard surfaces, it collects trash, sediment, and chemicals (like motor oil and fertilizer) that pollute local waterways.

The storm drainage division maintains the city's stormwater collection

Stream Restoration Public Meeting, May 15

Join the Public Works Department for a public meeting on the future of stream restoration in the city at 6 p.m. May 15 at the Sherwood Center. The Public Works Department recently completed a citywide assessment of the Accotink Creek, reviewing stream conditions such as bank erosion and width/height, quality of the riparian buffer, flood-plain connection, and more. Using this information, the city identified seven stream segments as potential areas where future stream restoration projects can be constructed.

At the meeting, you can learn more about these segments and provide your input on the city's future stream restoration project areas. We want to know what aspects of stream restoration are important to you and where you want us to focus. Info: PW-Stormwater@fairfaxva.gov, 703-385-7810

EagleBank Arena Graduation Events, May and June

George Mason University will hold commencement at 10 a.m. May 9 at EagleBank Arena and degree celebrations May 9-11. Area high schools hold their graduation ceremonies at the arena from late May through June. During this time, there may be increased traffic in the city and around the university.

Reception for New City Manager, May 2

The mayor and city council invite you to a community reception welcoming Laszlo A. Palko as the newly appointed city manager. The reception will be from 5-7 p.m. May 2 at the Sherwood Center. Info: 703-385-7850 attorney, is passionate about justice, democracy, and the fair and equal treatment of all people. She shares Gandhi's philosophy — the true measure of any society can be found in how it treats its most vulnerable members — and has spent her life and career helping individuals and families.

"You're really helping people in family law," she said of her 34 years as an attorney. "You're helping women get custody of their children. You're helping dads get visitation that maybe has been denied, women getting child support, spousal support, protective orders... you're making a big difference in people's lives. It's direct and immediate."

Helping others is a cause even closer to home: the longtime city resident provided pro bono services in United States v. Commonwealth of Virginia, a court case that deals with discrimination against people with intellectual disabilities, including her sister.

She also is passionate about transparent, free, and fair elections — and has worked on nearly every aspect of an election. When she was appointed to the City of Fairfax Electoral Board in 2018, she was the first woman on the board in nearly two decades. When it comes to elections, everyone should have "every single solitary molecule of access to the ballot," she said. "That's the whole point of America."

 STORM DRAINAGE
 SUPERVISOR

I've been with the Public Works Department for 16 years. I started on the crew of the storm drainage division, then as a truck driver. I spent six years after that with the asphalt heavy operations crew, rising to the position of assistant supervisor. Ultimately, I became the supervisor of the storm drainage division, which is part of the Public Works Administration and Engineering Division. I have 10 people on my crew.

We assess, repair, and build stormwater utility system updates. In the past year alone, we have rebuilt 19 structures and 16 outfalls. Our work is mainly preventative, so what we do helps the city avoid stormwater utility failures — and, more importantly, prevent major catastrophes.

The Mathy Drive culvert experienced severe erosion near two outfalls. The city reinstalled the pipe, added riprap (large rocks) for erosion control and outfall protection, added a headwall to stabilize the pipe and prevent future dislodging, and backfilled the area with fresh compactable dirt.

We are conducting a system-wide assessment of the city's stormwater utility infrastructure. We are mapping the system and are identifying and prioritizing projects so we can keep the system healthy and functioning properly. With the size of our system, the assessment is expected to continue for another five to seven years.

Out of sight, out of mind.

Stormwater management shouldn't be overlooked until a sinkhole arises. Most of everything we do is underground, and it's easy to underestimate its importance. Infrastructure is foundational and should be discussed with every city project. When we talk about roadways and sidewalks, for example, we should talk about stormwater management.

Residents can help keep materials out of the storm drain. Only rain down the drain cannot be overemphasized. Don't rinse anything down the drain, especially chemicals. Even light materials like grass, leaves, sticks, or branches can congest the drain: you just don't see it. Materials can back up the drain, and the wrong mix of chemicals and debris can be costly to repair – dangerous, destructive, and even deadly.

tional knowledge with fixed assets, payroll, accounts payable, tax-relief, ARPA, the city's annual audit, and other overall finance activities.

Guzman has served as staff accountant for numerous years. More recently, she has been acting finance director for the city since July 2023 and expertly managed the city's annual comprehensive financial report. She has begun the Certified Public Finance Officers (CPFO) Program via GFOA and will be attending a future Weldon Cooper's Leading, Educating, and Development (LEAD) training.

system: 300,000 feet of storm pipe, 1,840 catch basins, 145 outfalls, 28 box culverts, 324 driveway culverts, seven bridges, and 37 bridge culverts.

Crews replace deteriorated storm lines, perform preventative maintenance tasks, clear blocked streams, repair box culverts, and repair damaged driveway pipe and ditch lines.

The best way to support this team is to keep only water in the system. Keep branches and other debris from washing into pipes and streams, and refrain from washing chemicals such as fertilizer into curb inlets. Also, if you see something, say something: a "small" sinkhole is not the whole story, and erosion and damage are much larger under the surface.

The city's stormwater system is funded by a stormwater utility, a dedicated funding source that equitably distributes the cost of stormwater services among real property owners. Property is evaluated by its stormwater runoff impact: the more impervious (hard) surfaces a property has, the greater the stormwater fee obligation for that property. Info: fairfaxva.gov/stormwaterutility

HELPING HANDS

Meet Kamelia Roshanian, Vice-Chair, Board of Zoning Appeals

I have lived in the city since December 2023. I spent my very formative teenage years growing up in Fairfax City. After moving around the Beltway area, I returned to Fairfax because I loved the small-town feel while still being close to the hustle and bustle of D.C. The local restaurants and businesses really provide that local feel, while still having world-class businesses and companies right here in our community.

The Board of Zoning Appeals looks at the overall quality of a community and protects the interests of both the residents and the businesses to find a happy medium that fosters growth. When we review a justification that an applicant has made, whether a business or residence, we review the holistic impact it would have on the community.

The BZA provides balance for a community's development and planning. We want to honor the established city guidelines and ensure applicants' modifications do not have negative impacts on the community.

We are living in a more digital world where it's proven that people are less connected and involved in each other's lives. Giving back to and being an active part of your community is more crucial now than ever. Not only do you feel a sense of accomplishment by contributing to where you live, but you also develop incredible knowledge about zoning requirements and how the city balances different needs.

SUNNY SARNA

TRANSPORTATION CAPITAL
PROJECTS MANAGER

Transportation is a division of the City of Fairfax Public Works Department. At the direction of City Council, we design and construct roads, intersections, sidewalks, and trails to improve circulation and safety. Our projects are rooted in the city's Comprehensive Plan and planned in collaboration with the Economic Development Office, the Community Development and Planning Department, and other stakeholders. Most of our projects are funded by dedicated state and federal funding sources.

I have lived in Fairfax County my entire adult life and graduated from George Mason University. I joined the transportation division two years ago after working in the Fairfax County Public Schools Office of Design and Construction for 23 years. I worked as an engineering consultant in the private sector prior to that. The folks working in the city's transportation division are some of the most dedicated and caring people I've worked with.

I was attracted by the city's commitment to improving multimodal transportation and the city's record of receiving outside funding for transportation projects. The city has exciting plans to build off-street trails, shared use paths, new roads, safer intersections, and wider sidewalks.

My role is to oversee the consultants retained for design and contractors who build our projects and ensure projects are delivered on time. One project I am excited to see constructed is the Government Center Parkway extension, which will connect the existing county road to Jermantown Road in Fairfax City. This project will include improvements for pedestrians and cyclists as well as motorists.

Transportation projects take a long time to deliver, but the most successful projects occur when residents are involved early in the planning process and remain engaged throughout the project. I highly recommend following City Council and Planning Commission discussions, attending public meetings, reading Cityscene, and subscribing to the city's e-newsletters.
